

http://www

Special Report for HR Professionals

October 19, 2012
Number 547

The Management Advantage, Inc., PO Box 3708, Walnut Creek, CA 94598
www.hrwebstore.com newsletter@management-advantage.com 925-671-0404

INSIDE THIS ISSUE

- 1 The Fragile State of Talent Management
- 4 Help Listing Job Openings With State Employment Services
- 4 Subscriptions...

THE FRAGILE STATE OF TALENT MANAGEMENT

By Shlomo Ben-Hur, Ph.D.

Globalization offers business immense possibilities: bigger markets, more sources of innovation, and – in theory, at least – a wider, deeper pool of talent. That's the good news.

The bad news, though, is that large parts of the world are already facing talent gaps. Even with the downturn-driven workforce surplus we currently have, many organizations are still finding it difficult to find workers with the right skills and talents to meet their needs. Last year more than half of the CEOs questioned by DDI, a global talent management business, said that their talent pipeline was not growing fast enough, while other surveys find that organizations are already facing enormous difficulties in finding and keeping the people they need to grow their businesses. Some 68 percent of organizations report that they struggle to fill vacancies, while 55 percent face challenges in keeping the employees they do have.

And the really bad news is that this situation is going to get worse. A lot worse. In the years to come four key pressures will make these challenges ever more difficult.

The aging population

The first issue affecting talent is simple demographics: populations are getting older. By 2050 the number of people aged 65 and above in the G7 and BRIC nations will have doubled, while China will see the number of workers supporting each senior citizen drop from 10 to 2.5. Rethinking retirement will provide some of the shortfall, but only some of it: the proportion of the workforce available to work will steadily decrease.

Increased demand

The other side of this coin is that to support this aging population, we are going to need more workers, and lots of them. In fact, to sustain economic growth the US will require an additional 25 million workers by 2030, and Western Europe will require a staggering additional 45 million workers.

Continued on Page 2

Continued from Page 1

Employability

Organizations are becoming increasingly concerned about whether school-leavers and college graduates leave education with the skills needed to contribute to the modern economy. In countries such as the United States and the United Kingdom fewer people are studying much-needed technical disciplines such as engineering, science, and mathematics. Alongside this, only a quarter of professionals in India and 20 percent of those in Russia are considered employable by multinational companies.

Changing talent pool

A final force at play is the fact that people are changing, or at least their expectations are. Generational changes in the psychological contract between organization and employee are appearing as younger workers expect more than just financial returns and are more willing to change employers and travel to get what they want. We are already seeing this, too, with some recent fascinating research showing that large numbers of senior leaders no longer want to be promoted further, although only a minority of them will admit this to the business. So organizations are going to have to work harder to attract, keep and motivate talent.

So we may be neck-deep in a downturn-driven workforce surplus now, but the trend is clear: demand is going to increase and supply is going to decrease. Popular thought at present - in the Northern Hemisphere at least - is that Asia will help bridge any workforce gaps, but the region will not remain a reliable source for long. By 2020, in less than eight years' time, India is likely to be the only major global talent pool that continues to be a net exporter of workers. So in the decades to come organizations will be competing for employees on an unprecedented scale.

What makes this all the more worrying is that less than half of executives rate their existing performance and talent management activities as effective, while less than a third of leaders think that their company has got leadership selection and development right. So what is going wrong with the current approach to talent management?

Well, part of the issue here is that the traditional talent deal is outdated. Historically, talent management was based on the assumption that the initial investment involved in hiring and training someone would be recouped over time as the person settled into the role and started creating value for the organization. However, modern turnover rates mean that a sizeable proportion of employees leave before these costs have been covered. So financially, the old deal just doesn't make sense any more.

A related issue is the demand-planning challenge, which exists because internal and external environments – and hence labor needs – are less predictable now than in the past. It is also exacerbated by the way in which many companies view and manage their talent. All too often, external talent is assumed to be better and internal talent is not visible or accessible. The result is over-reliance on the external market for talent plus reduced retention levels as people become fed-up with being pigeonholed and the consequent lack of internal opportunities.

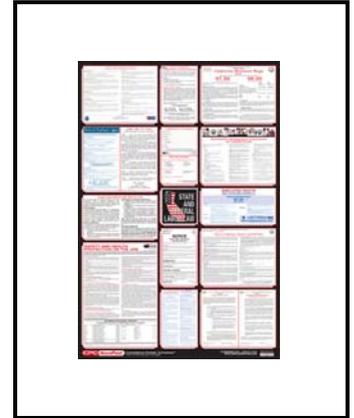

Shlomo Ben-Hur is an organizational psychologist and a Professor of Leadership and Organizational Behavior at IMD in Lausanne, Switzerland. He can be reached at shlomo.benhur@imd.org

Continued on Page 3

Labor Law Compliance Posters

State and federal governments are constantly adding and changing the posting requirements for employers. As things now stand, EVERY employer in the country is responsible for making available to every employee every day all of the required information. We can help with wall posters, but also with the same information in a Mobile Poster Pak for remote work locations.

<http://www.management-advantage.com/products/posters/states.htm>

Continued from Page 2

What makes this all the more difficult is that knowing what works is not as easy as it sounds. There is not a wealth of thorough research available, and what is out there is usually published by vendors and other interested parties and so unreliably objective. Even when there is consensus on what works, consultants and HR specialists often end up making things worse by creating well-intentioned yet ultimately not value-producing bureaucratic processes. Not that business leaders are blameless here, either: recent studies have found that only 7 percent of organizations hold managers accountable for developing their reports and that only a tenth hold a regular talent review with their boards.

So what's to be done?

The starting point has to be identifying which activities and processes will actually add real value to your business. So, think about what kind of talent you need, what you are currently doing to manage your talent needs and which of your current activities is genuinely making a measurable difference. Next – and this is a big one – you need to find a way of getting leaders and managers to own and actually invest time in talent management and development. That means setting explicit expectations with clear incentives; creating visibility and accountability through relevant metrics that are aligned with your strategy; supporting managers with training where required; and making sure that, as a business leader, you walk the talk.

Next, clarify strategy and ownership. Get in real specialists with a deeply pragmatic approach and integrate all talent and development-related areas behind one point of accountability. Distinguish between different types of talent or employee types, and assess the talent you do have to establish how good it is and to identify who is succeeding and who not. Create fluid talent pools instead of static succession plans, and have a clear view of your resourcing and retention strategies alongside this, and remember, don't forget that you need to look at this globally.

Finally, audit your activities every year. Do not expect amazing outcomes from year one, and do not rely on vendors for validation studies. Instead, establish both leading and lagging metrics that are commercially relevant to your business; these could include engagement, intention to leave, pipeline capability levels, and future demand. MA

Sponsored by Merit Resource Group

Effective business decisions and human resources decisions go hand-in-hand. Merit Resource Group helps its clients create this synergy by providing HR expertise to match unique company needs.

<http://www.merithr.com>

HELP LISTING JOB OPENINGS WITH STATE EMPLOYMENT SERVICES

Ever since America's Job Bank ceased operations, federal contractors and sub-contractors have been left to their own devices in meeting requirements for listing job openings with state employment services. Generally, that meant that it was necessary to go to each state agency and enter each job opening either manually or, if the agency would accept it, through upload of a data file. Dealing with 50 different state agencies is time consuming and it is easy to forget that step in the process. Accountability, however, has not gone away. The Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs (OFCCP) continually asks for proof that each job opening has been properly filed with the state agencies. Not having that documentation can mean you are officially "out of compliance." It could result in conciliation agreement, meaning the OFCCP will return periodically for up to two years to verify that you are doing what you should be doing. America's Job Bank was a much better solution for the requirement. And, it was a free service of the U.S. Government. OFCCP didn't like it, however, because they thought it allowed employers to escape a hands-on commitment to recruiting veterans, disabled, minorities and women.

If you are looking for something that will help you by doing the filing for you, you might investigate America's Job Exchange (www.americasjobexchange.com). They provide these services for a fee, but a small one. They might be just what you are looking for.

Subscriptions...

You are welcome to forward this message, in its entirety, to anyone you believe would benefit from receiving it. You may not post this message or its contents on a web page for further distribution. We encourage new subscribers and are pleased to continue our offer of FREE distribution for these SPECIAL REPORTS. An archive of our newsletters can be found on our web site. Just look for "Newsletters."

<http://www.hrwebstore.com/>

Special Reports for HR Professionals are available to our newsletter subscribers and web site visitors. However, you may receive a copy from one of your professional colleagues or friends. Please check the origin address to be sure. Nothing in this publication is intended to provide legal or other professional advice. Articles are informational only. Please consult a competent professional if you need legal advice.

The Management Advantage, Inc.

PO Box 3708
Walnut Creek, CA 94598
925-671-0404
©2012 - All Rights Reserved

www.hrwebstore.com

Editor: William H. Truesdell, SPHR
billt@management-advantage.com

Privacy Policy: Our subscriber list is considered confidential information. We do not sell or rent our subscriber or customer lists to anyone else. Your privacy is our primary concern. If you ever wish to unsubscribe, please click on the "unsubscribe" link at the bottom of each email message. If you would like to SUBSCRIBE to our FREE publications, please register your subscription by going to www.hrwebstore.com/newsletr/newsletr.html

Protect your federal revenues. Let us help you update your affirmative action plan. Call us today for a no-obligation estimate.